

ETHICS, ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE AND CLIMATE CHANGE

Edited by Paul G. Harris, The Education University of Hong Kong

'This collection displays the range of ethical issues raised by climate change, and the richness of the philosophical discussion that these issues have stimulated.'

– Peter Singer, Princeton University, US

'This timely volume . . . places the normative dimensions of climate change at the centre of its analysis. It collects together in one volume contributions by the most significant scholars working in the area [and] will be an indispensable reference text for those – scholars, students and policymakers alike – looking for a "one-stop shop" source of the most authoritative articles on this most-significant issue.'

– John Barry, Queen's University Belfast, UK

'We have entered the first century in 45 million centuries of life on Earth in which one species can jeopardize the planet's future . . . The puzzling result is the most complex moral storm ever to confront humans. In this excellent anthology the best minds we have . . . analyze the most promising and just routes to saving this wonderland Earth.'

– Holmes Rolston III, Colorado State University, US

Climate change cannot be fully understood or effectively mitigated without considering its ethical aspects. This volume brings together recent journal articles, written by eminent experts in the field, to illuminate the ethics of climate change and the related questions of justice. The editor has selected works that explore the themes of environmental philosophy, duties and responsibilities, intergenerational justice, international equity, cosmopolitanism, human rights, individual obligations and climate policy.

With an original introduction by the editor, this volume is an essential resource for scholars, students, activists and policymakers.
